Mayor Maxwell presents ‘state of city’

Anacortes Mayor Dean Maxwell will deliver his annual “State of the City” address Thursday, February 3 at the President’s Luncheon.

Mayor Maxwell said his report will note concern related to “a storm of restricted revenue,” but he said the City of Anacortes remains financially healthy. “The City of Anacortes continues to maintain strong restricted emergency reserves for each of our departments, in addition to a prudent fund balance in our general fund,” said Maxwell. “We have had ‘unqualified’ financial audits for 22 straight years.”

The mayor also reports that over the past 12 years, the city has attracted 30-plus businesses creating 1,400 new jobs in the business sector east of “R” Avenue. Among those businesses are Northern Marine, San Juan Composites, SHS.com and North Harbor Diesel.

The luncheon, sponsored by Verizon Superpages and SuperPages.com (see page two), takes place at the Salvation Army Anacortes Corps headquarters, 3001 “R” Avenue. It is open to all Chamber members and their guests.

Call the Chamber at 293-7911 to make reservations, $15 per ticket (please have your credit card ready when you call; cancellations must be made at least 24 hours in advance to avoid full billing).

February Business After Hours will take place at Fidalgo Bay Resort

See some of the dramatic improvements under way at Fidalgo Bay Resort when the Samish Tribal Nation hosts the Business After Hours event Thursday, February 17, 5:30 – 7 p.m.

Resort Manager Bob Shepard and tribal officials provided a peek at resort expansion plans on January 22 when the city conducted a ribbon-cutting to officially open Tommy Thompson Parkway. The 3.8-mile public path runs through the resort on Weaverling Spit, connecting to an abandoned Burlington Northern trestle that is being prepared for public access.

Tribal plans call for expansion of the existing resort clubhouse to create the Fidalgo Bay Resort Community Convention Center. The new facility will be available to the public. The remodel will also feature a tribal meeting place upstairs, with a sweeping view of Fidalgo Bay.

At the January 22 event, Samish Vice Chairman Tom Wooten noted that the resort was once the site of a tribal village.

Message from the Executive Director

Get involved with your Chamber today

There is no slowing down at your Anacortes Chamber of Commerce! After returning from their two-day annual planning session, this year in White Rock, B.C., the Chamber Board of Directors has laid out their work plans for the year.

Building on the solid accomplishments of 2004, the board and staff are focused on enhancing member services and benefits, increasing the effectiveness of communications, growing the membership, furthering economic development efforts, strengthening strategic partnerships, expanding community events and continuing community beautification efforts.

To accomplish these goals the Chamber will incorporate the latest technologies and apply good old fashioned elbow grease.

Numerous times have I heard Anacortes called “a diamond in the rough”. Well, it’s time to get polishing! There are numerous committees in place to tackle the work ahead, but they need the support and participation of the membership and the community in general. This is a great time to get involved and be a part of the success story.

In 1908, President Theodore Roosevelt said “Every man owes a part of his time and money to the business or industry in which he is engaged. No man has the moral right to withhold his support from an organization that is striving to improve conditions within his sphere.”

Join us won’t you? Call the Chamber today to see what opportunities lay ahead. Your investment will be rewarded.

Verizon sponsors President’s Luncheon on February 3rd

City hosts dedication of new Tommy Thompson Parkway

Anyone who has ever played Monopoly recognizes the name “Park Place,” one of the most valuable properties on the way to financial success.

Today Anacortes boasts a precious “Parkway” property that promises to play an immediate role in the business and recreational life of this island community.

Dozens of people including government, tribal and business leaders gathered Saturday, January 22 for the official opening of Tommy Thompson Parkway, a 3.8-mile public parkway that links downtown Anacortes with March’s Point.

The parkway, which winds along the city’s Fidalgo Bay shoreline, is named after the late Tommy Thompson, a narrow gauge railway creator who dreamed of running his train along the Fidalgo Island shoreline. The Thompson family was represented by Tommy’s widow, Anne, and one of their sons.

City Mayor Dean Maxwell expressed thanks to many individuals and organizations who worked together for more than a decade to make the parkway a reality.

City Parks and Recreation Director Gary Robinson, who was responsible for negotiating purchase of the former rail-line property from Burlington Northern, hailed the opening of the parkway as “a team effort – a great project that was a whole lot of fun to be associated with.” He paid tribute to Thompson, telling the crowd: “I have never met a man with more passion and drive.”

Speakers included Jon Soine, who represented the Washington Wildlife and Recreation Association. This organization contributed more than $400,000 to the project. Another speaker was Samish Indian Nation Vice Chairman Tom Wooten, who noted the tribe had lived, worked and played on the Fidalgo Island shoreline “for time immemorial.”

“Our ancestors tell us to welcome you all here,” said Wooten. “It’s a wonderful day, a great day for Anacortes and everyone here.”

County Commissioner Don Munks, whose family homesteaded property across the bay on March’s Point, recalled walking the path on journeys to and from town. He wore his Anacortes High School letter jacket in memory of those days of his youth.

Despite gray skies and light rain, dozens including Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Michael Broome were drawn to the early afternoon event. Among businesses represented at the ribbon-cutting were the Skagit Cycle Center and Island Outfitters.

City, county and business people gathered on a sun-splashed Commercial Avenue Friday, January 21 to acknowledge completion of another downtown Anacortes block upgrade.

At a rate of about one block per year, the City of Anacortes has completed dramatic block improvements including elements ranging from sidewalk extensions to street lamps and decorative trees.

Completed this year at a cost of $164,643 was the block between 4th and 5th streets.

Anacortes Mayor Dean Maxwell presided over the ribbon-cutting event, accompanied by District One County Commissioner Don Munks and City Council member Nick Petrish. Chamber representatives in attendance included President Pam Allen, President-Elect Bill Berry, Secretary Jean Fantini and Executive Director Michael Broome.

Mayor Maxwell extended thanks to area merchants for their cooperation and patience during the project. He thanked Commissioner Munks for two county grants totaling $70,000. He also introduced city employee Steve Lange, who served as manager on the project.

Acknowledgements on the project included Island Construction Site and Utilities, Inc., general contractor; Schwetz Construction, concrete; PSE/Intolight, street lighting and plant hangers; Leonard Bouinot and Skodje, design; Olympic Foundry, tree frames and grates.

City Tree Service

After almost two decades of work as a high-lead logger, Dakota Barnes transitioned into a new career as owner of City Tree Services. For the past three years he has operated in Anacortes, offering a full range of services from pruning and low-maintenance landscaping to tree removal.

Dakota, whose career includes stints with Weyerhaeuser and Miller Shingle, moved to Anacortes from the Upper Skagit area in response to demand for his services.

His clients range from homeowners to construction companies. All draw from his experience and benefit also from the fact that he owns the largest boom truck in the area. He was a climber for eight years in too, and he still pulls on his cork boots if the situation calls for it.

“I help people figure out which trees to retain, and which are at risk to come down,” said Dakota. “We do some limbing for view and some crown reduction to make a safer tree.”

Dakota notes: “Now is the time to do your pruning.”

For more information call Dakota at 360-202-6369.

Downtown Arch fund drive closes on goal

At the 98 percent mark of their fund-raising goal, members of the Arch Committee have extended the deadline for sponsorships to Friday, April 1. Bricks start at $45 and sponsorships start at $250.

Fund-raising volunteer Cory Hunter reports that orders for sidewalk tiles in the first “wave” of installation is February 15, with blank tiles to be replaced in subsequent waves until all 400 are in place.

“If everything goes according to plan,” said Hunter, “we will see the arch erected sometime in April. We’ve had a lot of community support. It’s been so gratifying to see a consistent, steady flow of support, with donations arriving in the mail each week.”

City block improvements that will ultimately include the arch start this month.

Tourism a vital part of local economy

Tourism, a vital part of this state’s economy, is an important economic engine for Skagit County as well.

According to a recent study conducted for the state by Dean Runyan Associates, 2003 travel spending in Skagit County totaled $179 million, with local tax receipts of $2.1 million. Travel generated earnings (wages and salary, other earned benefits and proprietor income) were $45.9 million.

The same study reported that “Although travel impacts are largest in absolute terms in Washington’s more populated areas, the significance of the visitor industry to local economies can be very substantial in some of the state’s rural areas.”

Anacortes, it seems, is a little bit urban … and a little bit rural.

Rural areas, the report noted, “tend to offer scenic and outdoor recreational opportunities. Campers and vacation home users are important to the local economies in these areas.”

Sounds like us, doesn’t it?

The report also acknowledged the importance of “day visitors,” who “tend to spend a higher proportion of their total spending on retail expenditures.” Runyan reported that day visitors represent “a significant economic infusion in cities and counties close to recreational areas, wilderness areas, lakes and beaches.”

That sounds like Anacortes, too.

As noted in previous articles about the Chamber’s tourism marketing strategy, we have designed a web site to “talk” to potential visitors from around the world. In view of travel trends related to elements such as increased air travel security and rising fuel costs, however, much of our marketing focus is on our neighbors in the Northwest.

Accordingly, we will again partner with Belo Broadcasting – Northwest Cable News and King 5 to extend a regional invitation to Anacortes via 30- and 60-second television commercials.

We will also look to our neighbors to the east, investing a modest amount of time and money in communities including Spokane and Yakima. In partnership with the Skagit County Chambers Executive Directors Association (SCCEDA), for example, we will take part in the 2005 Travel and Adventure Expo in Spokane on February 5, in the wake of the Seattle Travel Show Jan. 29 and 30.

“Because ‘backyard travel’ is so popular,” report Spokane Expo officials, “the show will highlight weekend and local destinations as well as the more exotic.”

We look forward to another healthy year of tourism in Anacortes, and will continue to keep you posted on our efforts to boost this important element of our local economy.
